The C++ Language Tutorial

A C preprocessor is a statement substitution (text substitution) in C programming language. It instructs the C compiler to do some specific (required) pre-processing before the compilation process.. When we compile a C program, C preprocessor processes the statements which are associated with it and expand them to make the code for further compilation.

I had a situation where I had a text file in an IFS folder and I needed to read its contents. I could have copied the file from the IFS into an IBM i library and then read it there, but I decided to investigate how I could read the file directly from the IFS using RPG. Fortunately there are three APIs which will allow me to do this.
